The CANDIDE model was created by Mikael Rydtaik at Linköping University in 1987 [10]. This work was motivated by the first attempts to perform image compression through animation [3][4], later called model-based, object-based or semantic coding. The CANDIDE model became known to a larger public through journal articles [5][7][8].

Chapter 10 Summary. They have stopped at an inn where someone steals Cunégonde's diamonds and pistols. As they now have no money, the old woman suggests they sell one of the horses and Candide takes her advice. The trio leaves and arrives in Cadiz, where a group of soldiers is being put together. Candide displays the training he received from the Bulgarians and is given command of the men.

Candide - Chapter 10 Summary & Analysis

Candide was originally conceived by Lillian Hellman as a play with incidental music in the style of her previous work, The Lark. Bernstein, however, was so excited about this idea that he convinced Hellman to do it as a "comic operetta"; she then wrote the original libretto for the operetta.
