Are patients sufficiently involved? The NHS has less patient involvement than other European health systems.

Demanding consumers can be informed participants. We need to solicit more complaints from poorer people. Otherwise we get a better service for the more vocal. Patient/doctor relationship is still crucial.

The NHS Constitution states that "the NHS belongs to the people"; and the NHS Citizen programme aims to embody these principles. NHS Citizen believes that services shaped by people, (especially those with lived experience), are more likely to be needs-led and patient-centred, resulting in better outcomes.
