Psychological pricing refers to the psychological pricing strategies marketers use to make customers buy the products, triggered by emotions rather than logic. Such strategies come in the form of: Charm Pricing: This involves reducing the price by a minimal amount (say 1 cent) which makes the customer perceive the price to be less. For example – the price of a $3 product is set as $2.99 in supermarkets as customers’ brains process $2.99 to be nearer to $2 and not $3.
