Relevancy: Your ad creative must be relevant to your offering/brand/industry in some way. Irrelevant images/videos are a waste of time (even if they capture attention). Use your creative to qualify your most interested audience members with relevancy. Urgency: People are psychologically programmed to hate missing out. Offers that come in limited quantities, expire on specific dates or are "limited" create urgency and (tend to) convert better than those without.

"The Complete Idiot's Guide to Creative Writing" is an eye opening and amazingly fun book to learn and follow from. I certainly don't remember English in high school being this fun and inviting. One thing the book does not do is hammer you continuously about grammar this, and comma that, and participle this...whatever "participle" is or means.
