A good overview of the origins of the peoples of Mainland Southeast Asia (Indochina) and how they came to build the civilizations we currently know as Myanmar, Cambodia, Laos, Vietnam and Thailand. The translation is mostly good, but has a number of errors in transcription of dates- most of these are relatively easy to figure out, but require paying some close attention.

The Making of South East Asia by George Coedès
In The Making of a Periphery, Ulbe Bosma draws on new archival sources from the colonial period to the present to demonstrate how high demographic growth and a long history of bonded labor relegated Southeast Asia to the margins of the global economy. Bosma finds that the region's contact with colonial trading powers during the early nineteenth century led to improved health care and longer life spans as the Spanish and Dutch colonial governments began to vaccinate their subjects against ...

In the 17th century the Dutch came as conquerors and colonists for whom the attraction was first spices and then coffee, rubber, and petroleum. Since mainland Southeast Asia produced no spices for export, it was less vulnerable to the navies of Portugal and The Netherlands, so the region was not greatly affected by the Muslims, Portuguese, and Dutch. In the 19th century, Britain and France became interested in mainland Southeast Asia as the back door to China and sought to possess it as a ...
